Revealed: The key diet trend predictions for 2020 - including plant-based 'everything', banana flour and pastas made from legumes

- A registered nutritionist has revealed her diet trend predictions for 2020
- She says the focus will be around the ongoing fascination with plant-based food
- Alternative flours, alcohol-free drinks and meat-plant blends will also be a hit

While 2019 was all about kombucha, hemp seeds and 'moon' milk, these are all set to take a back seat in 2020 in favour of plant-based whole foods and stone-ground ancient grains.

'Without doubt the focus of 2020 will be our ongoing fascination with plant-based foods (particularly plant-based proteins) and a continued uptake and popularity of plant-based diets,' Australian registered nutritionist, Kristen Beck, told FEMAIL.

'Whether you decide to go completely vegan or just incorporate more plant-based meals into your diet (flexitarian) the vital importance plants in our diet both in terms of our health and the wellbeing of the planet will form the basis of our food and nutrition trends this year.'

PLANT-BASED WHOLEFOODS

'Plant-based' is no new concept, but there are more people than ever opting for minimally processed wholegrains and legumes in their diets.

'Plant-based diets will reign supreme in 2020 because eating more plants is good for our health and the planet,' Ms Beck said.

'Westernised countries eat way too much meat, but not everything plant-based is necessarily healthy.

'The best plant-based diets are mainly composed of vegetables, fruit, beans and legumes, nuts and seeds and moderate amount of wholegrains.'

What are other key diet trend predictions for 2020?

Predictions for 2020:

Alcohol-free drinks

There is a rise in consumers seeking 'unique non-alcoholic' alternatives for their beverages, calling it 'zero-proof drinks'.

This trend offers an alternative for people at events or parties who are seeking an alcohol-free alternative to any drink on the bar cart.

Nut butter and unique spreads

Nut butter previously dominated the market with almonds and peanuts reigning as the top ingredients.

But now growth is anticipated in the market to more obscure nuts and seeds, including watermelon seed butter and pumpkin seed butter.

These spreads offer up more options for people who are keto and vegan so they can use the items on foods like crackers, vegetables, and toast.

Meat-plant blends

Brands focused on meats are able to add their own mark in the plant-based trend by incorporating organic, healthy ingredients into their own products to appease health-conscious consumers.

NOT-SO-SIMPLE SUGARS

Items like pomegranate molasses and sweet potato nectar could be a new healthy way for people to sweeten their baked goods and other foods next year without using the standard simple sugars.

STONE-GROUND ANCIENT GRAINS

The addition of quinoa into almost every food over the past five years or so has been great for the health of Australians - but foodies are now looking for more variety.

'As we look to increase our dietary variety ancient grains like farro, spelt, millet, bulger and teff can be great addition to our diets as they are nutrient-dense, high in fibre, and linked to health benefits including reducing cholesterol and lowering risk of stroke, heart disease, and type 2 diabetes,' Ms Beck said.

'Breads and wholegrain products made from stone-ground flours will continue to rise in popularity as we continue to develop our understanding of how not just the grain, but how it is processed impacts on our health (particularly our gut health).

'Mother Stone Multi-Grain Stone Baked Bread is a great new option.'

PLANT-BASED 'EVERYTHING'

Over the past few months, supermarkets have launched all kinds of new plant-based foods - from lasagnes and sausages to cheese and 'meat' pies.

'As plant-based foods and diets continue to grow in popularity, more and more plant-based and vegan-friendly processed and packaged foods will hit our supermarket shelves,' Ms Beck said.'

'And while this might all seem very exciting and healthy, just because a product is 'plant-based' doesn't actually mean it's healthy.

'Many new snack foods, meat-alternatives, non-dairy milks and processed foods contain significant levels of highly processed vegetable oils.

'Consumers should opt for options that use only whole food plant ingredients, such as Eimele's range of meals and snack bars, which include no artificial flavours, sweeteners or refined sugars and no-GMOs.'

SUSTAINABLE & REGENERATIVE AGRICULTURE

'Regenerative Agriculture was the buzzword of 2019,' Ms Beck said.

'And our interest in this approach to food and farming techniques focusing on soil regeneration, biodiversity and the holistic management of farms will continue as farmers, scientists and consumers continue to pay attention to how land use could improve the environment and help fight climate change.

'Expect to see more brands using regenerative practices.'

What is regenerative agriculture?

Regenerative Agriculture is a system of farming principles and practices that increases biodiversity, enriches soils, improves watersheds, and enhances ecosystem services. It's guided by four principles: Improving soil and water systems, making holistic decisions, developing reciprocal relationships between stakeholders and continually growing and evolving farms and communities.

ALTERNATIVE FLOURS

According to Ms Beck, the drive for innovative plant-based replacements for grains and increased interest in plant-based proteins will see more alternative flours made from fruits and vegetables appearing in supermarkets.

'Look out for banana flour and coconut flour for baking plus new innovations in packaged foods like legume-based dried pastas, chips and snacks,' she said.

'San Remo brand Pulse Pastas made from peas, lentils, chickpeas and borlotti beans is a good option, as it contains more protein and fibre than regular wheat pasta.'
